1. Introduction

Audax complies with national laws wherever we operate, and we urge our customers to do the same. If one of our products is implicated in potentially illegal activity, authorities in any country may seek data information from us as part of their investigation. Like other companies around the world, we would consider only valid legal requests on a case-by-case basis and would provide information if we believed it was necessary to comply. Unless a customer has chosen to provide us with their data, we would have no data to provide and Audax is committed to ensuring that your privacy is protected.

If you want to share your videos or photographs with the world, you control that decision, the platform you wish to use, and the audience that gets to see it – from privately sharing a video file with a friend to posting it online for the world to see. Audax cannot, and we believe should not, access your live feed, the video files on your memory cards or the video files on any other equipment. Since we cannot access it, we cannot provide it to anyone else – even with a court order or another valid legal demand.

Audax values customers' personal data, and our Audax Privacy Policy tells our customers what information we collect, how and when we collect it, how we use the collected information and with whom we might be compelled to share that information.

We make our privacy policy readily available to ensure that everyone who uses our technology or Products – or considers using it – will feel comfortable about how we treat their information. We encourage anyone with questions to write us at info@audaxuk.com for a clear and straightforward answer.
